

Singapore Institute of Planners Spatial Planning for a Sustainable Singapore

1 Day Conference cum Book Launch

Thur, 3 April 2008 • 9:00am - 5:30pm

Singapore Botanic Garden Function Hall, 1 Cluny Road (off Bukit Timah Road)

This one-day conference will explore the concept of sustainability planning and discuss the spatial development experience of Singapore over the last 40 years.

Since its early days of nation-building, urban planning has been pivotal in ensuring Singapore's survival and systematic growth. In recent years, planned urbanization led by its Concept Plan has maintained Singapore's competitive advantage and sustained growth in a rapidly changing global landscape.

SIP has invited a panel of planning experts to examine and review the impact and significance of sustainable development in Singapore. The speakers will dissect the issue of sustainability from various aspects of land use planning in Singapore.

These aspects include Singapore's response to globalization, city centre revitalization, housing, nature and sustainability, sustainable industrial development, CBD functional change and transportation. More importantly, challenges of reconciling environmental and economic needs, environmental quality and dealing with rising expectations will also be addressed.

Book Launch

In addition, the SIP book 'Spatial Planning for a Sustainable Singapore' will be launched. As a landmark publication showcasing Singapore planners' work and thinking in this globalization age, it is anticipated that the book will enrich Singapore's planning literature, providing a renewed perspective for thinking about urban planning in Singapore.

Who should attend?

SIP welcomes all those who are interested to join this symposium. International universities and government agencies having an interest in understanding the rationale of policy formation, planning system and its implementation in Singapore will find this conference a valuable source for learning about sustainability planning concepts and experiences. Local government agencies, industry professionals, teachers, students and researchers will also benefit from this conference.
